Excerpt from The Messengers of Peace: A Christmas Allegory A Member (opening the door and seeing two strangers, with whom he has a few words). It is not a member, but two strangers, who, I think, want to speak to you. Secretary. The rule says only that members must come in by the side door after seven o'clock, and that no guests are allowed. If these are strangers, let them come in; they should always be welcome. Enter the two messengers. Secretary. Welcome. What can we do for you? Peace Messenger. It would seem we have not been misled, and that this is indeed the Tavern Club. Secretary. It certainly is. We are just starting our Christmas revels. May we know the reason for your appearance, and who indeed you are? War Messenger. We may not easily convince you about ourselves; nevertheless, we beg you to believe that what we say is truth, however strange it sounds to ears of the Planet Earth. We are two messengers from Mars. Secretary. Do they teach English in the schools...
