Reviews

This book might be worth a read, and superior to other. Of course, it really is engage in, still an interesting and amazing literature. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

In those days workshop committees were still somewhat new institutions. In the few cases in which they existed, their scope was generally limited to welfare and recreation work. Plans for their development and hopes of their future were indeed many, but of actual experience there was then but little. I had, in consequence, to draw my matter from experiments then in progress at the engineering works of Hans Renold, Ltd., Manchester, with which I am connected, where committees on the general lines of those which I have described had been in operation, as regards Social work since 1909, and as regards Welfare and Shop Stewards work since early in 1917. Since writing in 1917, the possibilities of workshop committees have become a good deal clearer, so that when I was asked to revise the earlier statement for a new edition of the report of the British Association Sub-Committee, I could do so with greater confidence. The greatest changes which experience in the works, already referred to, had indicated were connected with the amalgamation of the Welfare and Shop Stewards committees into a single Shop Committee, and the development of Staff Committees. In this booklet these are dealt with in Part III, 3 (a) and (c), and in Part IV respectively. Part V, giving comments on working, has been made considerably fuller than in the original statement. The experience on...
