Not illustrated. 1903 edition. Excerpt: . CHAPTER II SEATS The seat is the earliest form of garden furniture, and between the felled tree-stump, which served our ancestors as a convenient resting-place, and the elaborate structures which are to be seen in modern gardens, there are a great variety of styles--good, bad, and indifferent. Notwithstanding the progress which has been made in the decorative arts of this country during the last decade, the furniture intended for our gardens still retains its reputation for being hopelessly crude and inartistic. Especially so is this the case with the class which we are now considering, and of which William Robinson has said, It is rare to see a garden seat that is not an eyesore. Why this should be so is somewhat difficult to understand, for neither in design nor construction is there any great difficulty to overcome. The fact that a large...
